TEACHER'S NOTES

JABALI ACROBATS

This incredible Kenyan troupe combines Chinese and African traditions of acrobatics in a fast-paced show that blends limbo, tumbling, jumping, dancing and amazing intricate balances. Performers bounce, bop, and balance to a joyful Benga beat as they combine Chinese acrobatic feats with East African musical tradition.

Winners of many national acrobatic competitions in Kenya, Jabali was named “Best New Act” at the Edinburgh (Scotland) festival in 1990. Since then they have performed at major arts festivals in Canada, the US, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, and throughout Europe. Based in Mombassa, Kenya, the Jabali Acrobats have been called “Kenya’s high-energy super-circus”.

The great majority of Kenyans engage in subsistence farming, but tourists attracted by Kenya's protected wildlife in national parks and reserves, are an important source of income. Kenya is one of the last places on earth where so many wild animals roam free. The major species are the elephant, rhinoceros, zebra, giraffe, lion and other large cats as well as birds and reptiles including the python and cobra. The Swahili word “Safari” (meaning journey) wouldn't mean much to most people if it wasn't for this East African adventure land.

Kenya is best known in the sports world for distance runners...both men and women.

Kenya's major cities are Nairobi, the capital, and Mombassa, the chief port and home of the Jabali Acrobats. The climate in Mombassa, located just below the equator, is hot and humid with an average temperature of 80 degrees, Mombassa began as a Swahili community about 1,000 years ago and is still considered one of Africa's great ports.

Kenya has more than 70 tribal groups within its populations. With western cultural values are becoming more deep-seated, the traditional values of the tribes are disintegrating. Other tribes in Kenya include Kikuyu, Luhia, Luo, and Kikamba as well as a plethora of minor tribal tongues.
